Ian McIntyre

Born a Man of Kent, for those who do not have the knowledge, I was born east of the River Medway. I came to live in Oban in 2004.

Worked in the Media, Distribution & Retail Industries. At the British Broadcasting Corporation, I was a member the Information Service Division working for various departments including BBC Secretariat and BBC/Open University. Designing, implementing, operating, information retrieval systems, paper, microfiche and computerised. After taking redundancy I studied Photojournalism at London College of Printing. Upon completion of the course I went freelance specialising in transport and craft industries. As a volunteer I covered Edward Hulton's restoration of a Sunderland flying boat whilst it was based at Chatham Dockyard which culminated in a book written by Peter Smith, the (restoration's project manager) titled "The Last Flying Boat ML814 Islander"

Have had a lifetime experience in caring, since the age of 14 or there about, firstly my father who became a quadriplegic then in later years I looked after my elderly mother.

Being a lorry driver for Royal Mail did not tarnish my love of driving/riding motorbikes and cars.
